ABSTRACT

This booklet is intended as a guide to help foreign students who are studying in the United States. Opportunities for foreign students to study in the United States exist as never before, in every state, at all education levels, and in virtually every discipline and subject field. It is anticipated that the foreign student population in this country, currently numbering 286,000, will triple in the 1980s. The booklet begins with general information for the foreign student. Reference works providing information about U.S. colleges and universities and guides to financial planning and scholarship support are cited. The booklet then goes on to describe organizations and agencies which can provide students with general assistance and with assistance in particular fields of study. Also described are organizations administering foreign student exchange programs in the United States and foreign student services. The booklet concludes with a listing of U.S. embassies and other overseas posts, binational education foundations and commissions, and student counseling centers. (Author/RM)

FOREWORD

Opportunities for foreign students to study in the United States exist as never before, in every State, at all education levels, and in virtually every discipline and subject field. It is anticipated that the foreign student population in this country, currently numbering 286,000, will triple in the 1980's.

In an effort to assist foreign students considering study in the United States, the U.S. Department of Education's Office of International Education Programs (OIEP) has prepared A Foreign Student's Guide to Study in the United States. This publication is designed to serve as a basic reference for students from other countries.

The Guide is part of a comprehensive effort by OIEP's Information Clearinghouse, which responds to thousands of questions annually from individuals and organizations worldwide. Such questions relate to the numerous issues in international education, including studying, teaching, working, and traveling abroad and foreign student concerns in the United States. The Clearinghouse welcomes your questions. We would also appreciate suggestions or comments you may have for future editions of this booklet.

Introduction: To the Foreign Student

This booklet provides you with helpful guidance for you to consider as you prepare for study in the United States. It does not provide detailed answers to questions, but is designed rather to refer you to the most appropriate sources of information in response to your needs.

The different organizations detailed in this publication can assist you in weighing the benefits of an American education, in determining what U.S. colleges and universities best meet your needs, and in securing other types of information you will need in order to study in this country. The ultimate decision to study in the United States and the choice of schools in which to enroll is, however, yours to make.

As you investigate the possibilities for study in this country, you should be aware of the major differences between the U.S. education system and those of other countries. Education in the United States is highly decentralized and is primarily the responsibility of the individual States rather than the Federal Government. Colleges and universities in this country are responsible for determining their own admissions policies and requirements and in administering their own financial aid programs. Because of this, the U.S. Government does not directly assist foreign students in securing admission to educational institutions or in obtaining financial aid from them.

Nor is the U.S. Government directly involved in the process of rating or ranking U.S. colleges or universities. This process of periodically evaluating higher education institutions to determine if they have met and continue to meet minimum standards, known in the United States as accreditation, is conducted by a variety of private local, state, regional, and national accrediting bodies. Chapter one of this booklet includes information sources regarding both the accreditation process and recognized accrediting organizations in the United States.

The first point of contact for many students still in their native land and contemplating study in the United States is the Cultural Affairs Officer at the nearest U.S. embassy or U.S. consular office. Other information sources include U.S. Government sponsored student counseling centers and binational foundations and commissions overseas. These various offices can provide general information about the U.S. educational system in addition to information about specific American schools, colleges, and universities. Information and guidance is also available regarding scholarship opportunities, visa requirements, employment restrictions, and other issues of concern. Chapter seven of this booklet contains a comprehensive list of these offices, by country.

General Information

General information about the U.S. higher education system, as well as procedures for applying for admission to U.S. colleges and universities is provided in—

Entering Higher Education in the United States. 1977. $1.00. Available from the College Board Publication Orders, Box 2815, Princeton, NJ 08540

Another useful guide, Fields of Study in U.S. Colleges and Universities: A Guide for Foreign Students, briefly describes subjects in which it is possible to earn academic degrees in this country. (See page 8.) Both publications list directories and source books of degree-granting U.S. institutions, many of which are available to the student in the library or reading room of U.S. consular office(s) abroad. (See chapter 7.)

Information about accreditation may be obtained directly from U.S. educational institutions and from the various accrediting agencies. A general description of the accreditation process is provided in—

Accreditation: Its Purposes and Uses. 1977. $2.00. Available from the Council on Postsecondary Accreditation, One Dupont Circle, NW., Washington, DC 20036.

A list of recognized accrediting agencies and organizations in the United States is available free of charge from—

Division of Eligibility and Agency
Evaluation
Office of Postsecondary Education
U.S. Department of Education
400 Maryland Ave., SW.
Washington, DC 20202

In regard to financial aid opportunities, most scholarship aid for students from other countries is available directly from individual U.S. colleges and universities. Application for assistance is ordinarily made along with the application for admission. Prospective applicants for financial aid should be aware, however, that there are only a limited number of scholarships available. Moreover, the U.S. Department of Education does not administer any program that provides general scholarship support to foreign students.

General reference works providing information about U.S. colleges and universities include:

The following three publications are helpful guides to financial planning and scholarship support for study in the United States:

Financial Planning for Study in the United States. 1976. $2.00. Available from the College Board Publication Orders, Box 2815, Princeton, NJ 08540.

A Guide to Scholarships, Fellowships, and Grants: A Selected Bibliography. (See page 8.)

*These two publications may be ordered as a set for $15.00.

A Selected List of Fellowship Opportunities and Aids to Advanced Education for United States Citizens and Foreign Nationals. 1980. Free. Available from the Publications Office, National Science Foundation, 1800 G St., NW, Washington, DC 20550.

Of particular interest to graduate students is the Fulbright Program, which provides fellowship assistance to students from abroad. Grants under this U.S. Government program are ordinarily awarded for graduate study or postdoctoral research. Further information about the Fulbright program is available from binational education foundations and commissions. (See chapter 7.)

An additional useful publication, Practical Guide for Foreign Visitors, provides a detailed description of higher education in the United States and offers advice on preparations for arrival in the United States. (See page 9.)

Organizations and Agencies of Assistance to Foreign Students from Particular Areas and in Particular Fields of Study

The African-American Institute (AAI)
833 United Nations Plaza
New York, NY 10017

AAI administers four major training programs for African nationals and several other smaller programs oriented towards specific countries or specific projects. The four major programs include the following:

The African Graduate Fellowship Program II is a competitive training program that provides awards to selected Africans for graduate degree training programs in the United States. Awards are only available in developmental-related fields and all applicants must be officially nominated by their governments. This program is not available to students from North African countries.

The Southern African Training Program provides training awards to students from Zimbabwe, South Africa and Namibia. Awards are tenable at institutions in the United States and in Africa. Students may pursue technical, undergraduate and graduate degree programs in developmental related fields of study.

The Southern African Student Program is also designed for students from Zimbabwe, South Africa and Namibia. Awards are only offered for graduate degree programs in the United States.

The Development-Training Program for Portuguese-Speaking Africans offers training opportunities to students from the Portuguese-speaking countries of Africa. All participants must be nominated by their home governments. Awards under the program are tenable in the United States, Africa, Portugal and Brazil.

America Mid-East Educational and Training Services (AMIDEAST)

1717 Massachusetts Ave., NW.

Organizations Administering Foreign Student Services

American Friends Service Committee
1822 R Street, NW
Washington, DC 20009

The Committee provides accommodations for international visitors who are in Washington for postgraduate study purposes or en route to other parts of the United States.

American Youth Hostels, Inc. (AYH)
National Campus
Delaplane, VA 22025

The American Youth Hostels, Inc., a non-profit youth service organization, establishes inexpensive hostel accommodations for youths traveling for health and recreation purposes.

In addition to the AYH Travel Program of organized small group trips by bicycle, hiking, van and public transportation, AYH is offering a new travel program specifically for foreign students, the "Share America" project. This program is designed especially for international and American youth hostel members 18-30 years old who want to discover America together via van transportation throughout the United States. Both programs are described in the AYH brochure Highroad to America, which is available free upon request from AYH.

The Foreign Student Information Clearinghouse
The College Entrance Examination Board
1717 Massachusetts Ave., NW
Washington, DC 20036

The Foreign Student Information Clearinghouse assists foreign students in their native countries considering study in this country by providing them with information about colleges and universities in the United States. Further information is available from American diplomatic posts abroad and from the above address.

Foreign Student Service Council of Greater Washington, Inc.
1623 Belmont Street, NW.
Washington, DC 20009

The Council provides educational programs and various services to foreign students living in or visiting the Nation's Capital. For visiting students, the Council offers hospitality with local families, helps in arranging accommodations and appointments, and organizes seminars on various aspects of U. S. Government. For students living in Washington, D.C., the Council organizes seminars and provides information and advice.

International Student Services (ISS)
291 Broadway
New York, NY 10017

ISS staff will meet incoming foreign students upon arrival at 18 ports of entry in the United States, assist with customs clearances, arrange for temporary overnight accommodations, assist with transportation to universities, and help with general problems. ISS also arranges short-term home stays for international students with American families in 175 cities nationwide and programs short-term educational tours in the United States. A fee is required for some of these services.

International Visitors Information Service (IVIS)
801 19th St., NW.
Washington, DC 20006
